Sen. Stamas introduces legislation protecting military personnel from late vehicle-registration fees

LANSING – State Sen. Tony Stamas, R-Midland, is introducing legislation exempting active military personnel from paying late fees to renew their vehicle registration.

Stamas' legislation would allow residents on active military duty stationed outside of the United States to renew their expired vehicle registration within 60 days of returning home without being charged a late fee.

“The men and women serving in our military should not be penalized for doing their duty,” said Stamas, vice-chairman of the Senate Committee on State Police and Military Affairs. “It is our duty to support them while they are serving our country. These are unique circumstances and we need to be understanding.”

The state currently charges vehicle owners a $10 fee for late registration renewal.
